One of the key ideas in This House of Grief is that we are vulnerable when and because we love. Garner thus suggests that love and violence are fatally conjoined, and rejects 'the sentimental fantasy of love as a condition of simple benevolence, a sunlit region in which we are safe from our destructive urges'.

The Grief Self-Exploration House is a great means for helping kids to understand their grief and what's really important. Remember, when you're helping a child to grieve, your role is to walk alongside them and help to facilitate the process of them working through their own grief, not to do their work for them. We originally found this awesome idea at The Grief Center.

This House of Grief is an intimate and biting exploration – of truth, of human nature, of justice. And if that is not enough, it is worth reading simply for the quality of Garner's prose. Reply. whisperinggums permalink * December 8, 2014 15:43

Helen Garner, This house of grief: The story of a murder

Grief makes bedfellows with guilt and confusion and it turns the whole house upside down. It just comes and goes as it pleases, shamelessly disrupting and gatecrashing your day. I have seen grief as a punk squatting in my house that you cannot evict. Grief separates and isolates. It sticks you in the attic or the basement and locks the door.
